A primary goal of exposure research with adults is to develop valid techniques to assess the acute effects of air pollution on human health. As a first step toward that goal, we examined whether older and younger adults differ in their breathing responses to traffic exposures, whether the responses differ between rush-hour and even-day exposures, and whether the breathing responses are influenced by changes in exposure to traffic-related air pollutants. We compared the breathing responses of 26 younger adults (age: 24.6 ± 4.0 yr) and 26 older adults (age: 66.1 ± 6.2 yr) to an initial baseline period of about 20 min of quiet sitting followed 82157476af
